

2014 CSCTFL Keynote Speaker—Dr. Brandon Wiley

Dr. Brandon Wiley is the Executive Director of Asia Society’s International Studies Schools Network (ISSN), a design-driven network of over 30 public, charter and independent schools, located in eight states across the U.S. The ISSN is focused on supporting the development of internationally focused schools that foster students to be globally competent and college/career ready. Brandon coordinates the efforts of a national team of consultants, while assisting district and school leaders to implement the ISSN school model and Graduation Performance System. Before joining Asia Society, Brandon served as the Assistant Superintendent for Curriculum and Instruction in the West Seneca Central School District. With experience as a classroom teacher, Director of Staff Development and district-level administrator, Brandon offers practical experience to implementing school and district reforms and innovative programs. He is a frequent blogger and sought after speaker focusing on school reform, globalization and school innovation. Brandon holds degrees from the State University of New York at Fredonia in elementary education, curriculum and instruction, and educational administration. He earned his doctorate degree in educational and organizational leadership from the University of Pennsylvania.
